(Potential penalty).
7. Do you wish to file IRS Form 8858 with your tax return to report the foreign (non-U.S.) rental property as a “foreign branch”? _____ Yes / No _____

Under new law, non-U.S. rental properties owned by U.S. persons meet the definition of “foreign branches”. The requirement to file Form 8858 arises whether the rental property is actively managed by the U.S. person or passively managed through a management company. Additionally, any foreign taxes associated with the rental income from each property must be categorized under a new “foreign branch” income category and those taxes may only be utilized against other income that is considered foreign branch category income.

The filing of Form 8858 involves the disclosure of the general ownership structure of the rental property, the rental income associated with a given property (similarly to what is reported on Schedule E of your income tax return), the preparation of an associated balance sheet, and report any related party transactions where applicable.

Failure to file Form 8858 would meet the IRS classification of a “substantially incomplete tax return”, which would result in an indefinite statute of limitation period.
